CANCER SUPPORT COMMUNITY LAUNCHES NEW WEBSITE

WASHINGTON – (Feb. 12, 2016) – The Cancer Support Community, an international nonprofit, has launched its new website, www.CancerSupportCommunity.org, a destination for information, tools and support to manage the full impact of cancer.

In addition to offering new content for patients, caregivers and professionals, the website features a user-friendly navigation and utilizes responsive design for optimal viewing on desktop as well as mobile devices. The Cancer Support Community consulted with users as well as web experts to create a website to serve a full range of needs.

The new website allows visitors to quickly access pages to learn about cancer types and treatments, find support programs and resources, and browse tips and resources for living with cancer.

“As more and more people turn to the Internet and to mobile devices for education and support, we are excited to launch a rich, user-centric website that will better meet the needs of people impacted by cancer,” said Kim Thiboldeaux, Chief Executive Officer of the Cancer Support Community.

According to a 2012 study by the Pew Internet Project, 72 percent of internet users say they looked online for health information within the past year, and half of health online research is on behalf of someone else (i.e. by a caregiver or loved one).
